

Ecological Impacts of Tourism: Case Study of Iloilo City

Submitted by:

Erlinda Grace L. Buendia

Angelica K. Cofreros

Cristine Paula F. De Asis

Mary Quencel C. Elgario

Kyrstel Ann C. Ellorquez

Thea Marie J. Espanol

Rommel D. Fajada

Lynard O. Lachica

Jyzelle Faith E. Olmedo

Felzy Mae D. Quanico

October 2018

Executive summary

This study entitled "Ecological Impacts of Tourism: Case Study of Iloilo City" aims to fully determine the impact of ecological tourism in Iloilo City. The dramatic impacts of tourism in the developed world which has improve, and often provide the necessary example, for developing countries like ours. Tourism obviously has the advantage as a contributor to the economic development that has other activities might not have in Iloilo City. The respondents of the study were the local people around the city. This study is conducted in school year 2018. The 60 respondents of the study will indicate the extent of the agreement or disagreement randomly through the use of stratified random survey. This descriptive survey research utilized a researcher made questionnaire validated by a panel and this is reliability tested to describe the data gathered. The frequency count and percentage will be used. For inferential statistics, the independent samples in simple analysis of mean, frequencies, and standard deviation will be used.

Tourism is also held responsible for climate change at number of destinations. The continuous growth in the population and number of hotels at the destination is result in to loss of habitat to many animal species as well as our natural resources. Due to overuse of the place in the form of frequent walking by tourists to a place result in degradation of that area like in mountain areas it result into naked peaks. The tourists leave the garbage that causes pollution. All this impacts at the destinations are a matter of concern particularly for the researchers. The tourism development in Iloilo City, too, is not free from such impacts.

Today, the difficulties that facing of Iloilo City is we can still beautify and secure historical facts that lead us to this reputable evidences and God's creation. Ilonggos are the stewards that will guard the stunning of the nature and conserve our tremendous culture.