Abstract

Acquiring an entrepreneurial mindset can allow students to develop businesses idea and eventually establish a new business venture. According to Lackeus (2016), an entrepreneurial mindset is the feelings and the belief of a particular ability to think outside the box. In today's tumultuous working environment, students need to gain entrepreneurship experience before graduating, as many employers seek students with an entrepreneurial mindset. It is essential because students who have an entrepreneurial mindset are accountable for their actions, bring new perspectives and youthful ideas into the workplace. Hence, this study explores the entrepreneurial mindset of Hospitality students of John B. Lacson Foundation Maritime University – Molo, Inc. The research design used in the study is a quantitative research design using Google Form survey questionnaires composed of 25 items. The data is gathered by using random sampling, which consists of mainly 3rd-year students of Bachelor of Science in Cruise Ship Management and Bachelor of Science in Tourism Management, by distributing 100 participants in Google Form survey questionnaires of the students. The findings of this study are significant inferences for the entrepreneurial mindset such
